MOYLE, ALLEN EXPECTED TO CONTINUE SEATTLE FLIGHT

ST. PAUL, Alaska, Sept. 17.—Don Moyle and Cecil A. Allen, California aviators who vanished ten days ago attempted a nonstop flight from Japan to Seattle, may take to the air again today.

Their plane apparently is safe and ready to resume the flight, according to a conversation conducted on Navarin Island.

In the conversation conducted from St. Paul with a Russian priest acting as interpreter, the flyers are expected to start today. Moyle and Allen landed safely on Navarin Island, near Cape Navarin Island. Their plane has been refueled by the Buriat and the ship was reported undamaged when the flyers came down, presumably because of lack of fuel.

According to the conversation with the rescue ship, the weather was unfavorable for the resumption of the flight this morning, although storms around Navarin Island were reported subsiding early today.

The Russian priest interpreter said the rescue ship was vague as to the planned destination of the flyers, although he said as far as he could understand "Moyle and Allen planned to go direct to Seattle from the island. They probably pass over or near St. Paul."

Later in communication the Buriat said the flyers hoped to arrive in Seattle on September 22. Asked to explain the conflicting statements as to the plans of the flyers, the priest stated that Buriat officer gave no satisfactory explanation.

The ring allegedly given to Mrs. Eversole, according to the testimony, was one like a ring belonging to the judge's wife.

Testifying she wore Mrs. Bostwick's ring for a while, Mrs. Eversole said the judge declared "I was a friend of his wife and that he wanted me to have a ring like hers."

"Were you a friend of his wife?" attorneys asked.

"No, I have never met her," Mrs. Eversole answered.

That the city owes, according to Safety Director Wallace Crist, $115

carry this fund through the year.

That Mr. Anderson, representing a firm manufacturing traffic

That the Calcar Products Corp. presented a plan of disposing of sludge from the sanitary sewage disposal plant. The plan was approved by council with the request that plans be forwarded to the state department of health.

That the question of furnishing additional traffic lights be referred to the service director to obtain probable costs and prices.

MOYLE, ALLEN EXPECTED TO CONTINUE SEATTLE FLIGHT

Russian Soviet Steamer Wireless Says Plane In Good Condition; Daring Airmen Landed Because of Shortage of Fuel, Is Belief.

ST. PAUL, Alaska, Sept. 17—
Don Moyle and Cecil A. Allen, California aviators who vanished
ten days ago attempted a nonstop flight from Japan to Seattle, may take to the air again today.

Their plane apparently is safe and ready to resume the flight, according to a conversation conducted on Navarin Island.

In the conversation conducted from St. Paul with a Russian priest acting as interpreter, the flyers are preparing for an immediate hopoff and may start today.
Moyle and Allen landed safely on Navarin Island, near Cape Navarin Island. There plane has been refueled by the Buriat and the ship was reported undamaged when the flyers came down, presumably because of lack of fuel.

According to the conversation with the rescue ship, the weather was unfavorable for the resumption of the flight this morning, although storms around Navarin Island were reported subsiding early today.

The Russian priest interpreter said the rescue ship was vague as to the planned destination of the flyers, although he said as far as he could understand Moyle and Allen planned to go direct to Seattle from the island. They probably pass over or near St.
Paul.

JUDGE'S TRIAL GOES ON TODAY

Mrs. Eversole Reveals Threat Made Against Her By Rubrecht; Is on Stand.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 17—Trying to outprobe Judge Homer Z. Bostwick, attorneys for 1400 complainants who petitioned for his dismissal today continued attempts to prove the judge threatened Mrs. Opal Eversole with perjury charges unless she returned a diamond ring he allegedly gave her before her fourth marriage.

Mrs. Eversole, who said she is 24 years old, although one previous marriage license gave her age as 18 nine years ago, told the story of her friendship to the jury, but did not definitely and directly say Bostwick made the purported threat.

First Assistant Prosecutor Franklin Rubrecht, who later was discharged after an investigation of the case, threatened her with perjury charges, however, Mrs.
Eversole said.

Declaring she had perjured herself when she applied for her last marriage license, Rubrecht added that the offense was punishable by a sentence to the Marysville reformatory, she testified.

"But if I would return certain property I had, the charge would be dropped, he said, "Mrs. Eversole testified.

The ring allegedly given to Mrs.
Eversole, according to the testimony, was one like a ring belonging to the judge's wife.

Testifying she wore Mrs. Bostwick's ring for a while, Mrs. Eversole said the judge declared "I was a friend of his wife and that he wanted me to have a ring like hers."

"Were you a friend of his wife?"
attorneys asked.

"No, I have never met her," Mrs.
Eversole answered.

Judge Bostwick also gave her $1375 to buy an automobile, Mrs.
Eversole said on the stand.

and; Thought Suicide.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17—A verdict of suicide or accidental death by hanging was expected to be returned by Coroner A. J. Pearce here today in the death of Samuel Livingston Mather, Jr., 15, son of
S. Livingston Mather, president of

The boy's body was found in his own room at the Mather home yesterday, suspended from a leather belt which had been fastened at the top of the door to the room.
His death was not revealed for several hours after the body was discovered by members of the fam-

Authorities said they had been unable to determine whether the youth had intentionally taken his own life or had become caught in a noose and strangled before he could free himself. He had grieved greatly over the death of his mother last June and had just recovered from an attack of hay fever. Relatives said he appeared in high spirits when last seen alive.
He left no note.

KIWANIANS HEAR JUDGE SCHRAMM

CONGRESS TO FACE DEMANDS FOR BEER

(Copyright, 1931, By International News Service)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Pressure for the legalization of real beer is becoming so high-powered and persistent in Washington that it now seems fairly certain that the oncoming congress is going to be compelled to meet the issue and grapple with it seriously.

In the ten years since prohibition, beer bills almost without number have been introduced in congress only to be laughed down, piled down, or left to die a moldy death in some committee pigeon-hole.

That this will not be true in the approaching session is now generally conceded, even by the drys themselves. They are confident they can beat them, but they admit that the fight is going to be harder this session than ever before, and a few, a very few, are not cocksure of the ultimate outcome.

The difference between this session and past sessions is that the battle for beer has now been put upon a somewhat different plane—economic rather than prohibitory. "Beer for revenue" now dominates the discussion instead of "beer for the thirsty."

With a billion dollar deficit already incurred, and a billion and a half treasury shortage anticipated for the current year, the treasury is fairly desperate to find a "painless tax" which will take up some of the slack without resort to the dread method of increasing the income tax brackets.

Powerful bankers and industrialists, who heretofore have abstained from any participation in the Guerilla warfare over prohibition, are undeniably swinging over to the "beer for revenue" philosophy as a means of forestalling federal tax increases. Their pressure upon President Hoover and upon the administration generally is enormous—and it is growing. The White House mail-bags are filled daily with this pressure and it is augmented by many of Mr. Hoover's callers, big business men, bankers, and political well-wishers.

The American federation of labor, which has long advocated beer for the workman, is now advocating "beer for revenue" and as a means of forestalling the wage cuts which labor envisions if taxes upon industry are increased.

Next week at the American Legion convention in Detroit it would not be surprising to see the legion go on record for legalizing beer, for the first time in its history.

Collings Death Still Is Mystery

BY JAMES L. KILGALLEN.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Sept. 17.—Police officials worked at a hectic pace today in a determined attempt to solve Long Island Sound's most baffling murder mystery following the finding of the bruised and battered body of Benjamin P. Collings, Stamford, Conn., yachtsman.

The recovery of the body confused rather than clarified the slaying of Collings on his yacht a week ago. Collings' body, the hands and feet bound and the skull fractured from left cheekbone to the top of his head, was washed up on the beach of the estate of Marshall Field 3d at Lloyd's Neck, L. I., yesterday morning. During the early hours of Thursday, Sept. 10, he had been mysteriously cast overboard from his cabin cruiser, the Penguin.

Mrs. Lillian Collings, attractive 28-year old widow of the slain man, will be interrogated by the authorities again even though her relatives have retained counsel to "protect her rights." Officials of Suffolk-co, who now have assumed jurisdiction over the case, insist that further questioning of the woman is necessary to aid in clarification of certain details of the murder mystery.

A coroner's inquest was to be held today at Huntington town hall, where temporary investigation headquarters have been established.

Whether Mrs. Collings, whose strange story of the murder on the yacht and her subsequent kidnapping by two "pirates" first brought the attention of the authorities to the case, will appear at the inquest was problematical. She was reported to be in a state of near collapse at her home in Stamford, where she has been in seclusion for two days following four lengthy interrogations to which she was subjected by Nassau-co and Suffolk-co officials prior to the finding of the body.

District Attorney Alexander Blue, of Suffolk County, who has assumed complete charge of the investigation, indicated this morning that he was not entirely satisfied with the story told by Mrs. Collings. She said two men boarded her husband's yacht about midnight a week ago last night and insisted that he take a "wounded companion" across the sound. However, she never saw the wounded man.

The "pirates," she said, later engaged in a quarrel with her husband, trussed him up, and tossed him overboard. Then they kidnapped her, forcing her to leave her five-year-old daughter, Barbara, behind. They paddled her about in a canoe for hours and finally put her off on to the motorboat Bo-Peep, from which she was rescued at 5:30 in the morning. She declared one of the men was about fifty year old, the other a youth of 17. She said the elderly man attempted to attack her.

JUDGE VETOS A MARRIAGE

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. — Connecticut laws give each judge of probate the right to decide whether a girl under sixteen may get married. When such a case came up to Probate Judge William V. Mangan here, he declared the girl must wait another year. The girl wanted to marry a man 21. Judge Mangan declared he was in favor of all hasty marriages.

STATE FAIR STILL BLUE RIBBON EVENT OF THE CENTRAL STATES

The Ohio State Fair is still the blue ribbon exposition of the American continent. Its buildings, parks, driveways, landscaping and scenic beauty excel all similar institutions. In every line of exhibit it ranks in quantity and quality above all others.

The Ohio State Fair, of 1931, portrayed the excellence of America's leading livestock breeds. The judges, who awarded the ribbons, were the highest calibre. In 1931, the number of animals exhibited and the number of entries registered, were the greatest in the history of the exposition.

The saddle, sulky, and draft horse, each won applause. Cattle, sheep and dairy herds played well their part. The land and bacon type of hog, each had its admirers. Mary's little lamb is still a favorite. Last year, 1930, a great building was dedicated. It is perhaps the greatest show pavilion in the world, for sheep and wool.

At that time, the statement was made, in Governor Cooper's address, that this building would meet the demands of exhibitors for the next ten years. But this year, two large tents were needed, to take care of the overflow of the world's greatest sheep and wool display.

The poultry show had its thousands of visitors. Year by year, at better grows. Cock and hen are still in partnership with bacon and eggs and hen and eggs. All lines of poultry exhibits were at the peak of quality.

Never before was there such richness of color, flavor, quantity, and artistic arrangement, displayed in the agricultural and horticultural department. The tokens of a master hand were to be seen in the manner, in which these exhibits were placed on dress parade.

Failure of the legislature to provide funds kept some of Ohio's state institutions from making their usual exhibits. One of the high-spot features was the Columbus buildings. The Capital City Chamber of Commerce filled this building with pleasing exhibits.

The State Highway exhibit pleased State Fair visitors. Half of Ohio's tax dollars come from the four cent gas tax.

The exhibits made by the Conservation division were highly interesting. The Junior Fair was a big surprise. The grandstand program won applause.

Stagg Has Less Than 25 Candidates to Work With

BY LEE FISCHER
International News Service Sports Writer.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—Chicago's fortieth football team won't be the best that has ever represented the midway institution nor on the other hand, will it be the worst.

It will be the sort of an aggregation which is the delight and despair of loyal followers—a team which may record a surprise victory when least expected or may take it on the chin week after week. The most that one can say for the 1931 edition of the Maroons is that they'll give you something to hope for—something which one hasn't been able to say consistently about midway teams during the last five years.

Coach Alonzo Stagg, to whom the entire nation is paying tribute as he finishes his fourth decade as Chicago's mentor, finds his problem this year similar to that of many recent seasons—lack of men. Though he has devised many plays now copied throughout the country, and his athletes have had the spirit and will to execute them, the ability and numerical strength have usually been sadly lacking.

The 1931 season sees little change in the situation. Next year, perhaps, with the restrictions on incoming freshmen lifted, there may be a turn for the better, but when the veteran coach counted noses at Tuesday's initial practice, there were less than 30 candidates on hand. Thus with fewer men than the smallest Chicago high school at his disposal, Coach Stagg is called upon to build a team which must cope with such mighty aggregations as Yale, Michigan, Purdue, Illinois and

That the national singles championship of the United States will be Vines-clad for many years to come is the conviction held by 12,000 witnesses of Ellsworth Vines' victory over George Lott at Forest Hills, L. I. Vines, who is not yet twenty, has not reached the potential peak of his game as yet, experts declare. Next year he should be at least 25 per cent better, and two years from now, it is predicted, the California youngster will have no peer throughout the world. It is quite possible that Vines, with a head start of eight years on the Old Master, Tilden, who was 27 when he won his first title, may eclipse the record of "Big Bill," who ruled uninterruptedly from 1920 to 1925 inclusive. Above photos show the new champion's forehand and backhand drives and a close-up of his grip.

Sounds like a hopeless task, doesn't it? Perhaps, but don't wander out to the practice field expecting to find Coach Stagg or any of his squad singing the blues.

Instead, you'll find a feeling of optimism which seems to pervade the atmosphere, particularly when the Yale game comes up for discussion. The Yale game here on Oct. 17 is the Chicago season. There are seven other contests on the schedule, it is true, but the manner in which the Maroons meet Yale's first invasion of the middle west will determine the success or failure of the entire campaign.

Chicago should start the season with a good team, composed of a handful of returning veterans and some particularly fine sophomores. If the Maroons can get by without an unusual amount of injuries—which they haven't done for a couple of seasons—they'll be dangerous right to the finish.

"revenge" will provide interesting sidelights in the classic. The beligerent Burleigh Grimes will be out to avenge the two beatings he took from the Mackmen last year.

Rube Walberg of the A's, knocked out of the box in the third game of the 1930 classic, will be aching for a chance to beat the Cards. And the taciturn Grove, himself, would like to hook up with Jess Haines again and even the score for the 3 to 1 defeat that Old Jess hung around his neck last year.

Grimes is one of the unluckiest hurlers ever to pitch in world series competition. While with Brooklyn he beat Cleveland, 3 to 0, but since then has failed to win a world series game in four starts.

Mrs. Lena Reid returned home late Saturday night from Flint, Mich., where she has been visiting and caring for her daughter Mrs. Merrel Valentine. She also came with her mother and her little infant daughter who is a month old. They will visit with her parents for a while.

Dr. Harry Prushing and wife from Columbus called on his brother, V. H. Prushing, Sunday, who is confined to the house and in bed last week, he is somewhat better now.

Mrs. Mary Young is visiting with her sister at Beavers, Ohio. She has been gone a week.

Mrs. Everett Seeds and Mrs. O. H. Wells were at Columbus Monday afternoon shopping.

At the regular meeting of the Pythian Sisters, Ashville Temple, No. 366, Tuesday evening Sept. 15th, a memorial service was held for Nellie E. Merriman, Past Supreme Chief, who died July 6th.

The first division of the M. E. Church aid held a social at the church Wednesday afternoon. There was a large crowd present. A dainty lunch was served.

The local band gave a fine concert Tuesday evening at the intersection of Long and Main-st. A big crowd was out to hear them.

The little pet dog of the Becketts was killed Tuesday by the train. Nearly every one in town knew "Teddy". He has been a feature in the Pet parade at Circleville during Pumpkin show and has won three ribbons in the past three years.

A Tennessee man who died at 91 had never been farther away from home than 11 miles, had never seen a train, motor car or electric lights, no runs, no hits, no errors.

How One Woman Lost 47 Lbs of Fat

In 3 Months and Feels Years Younger

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for nearly 3 months. I have continued taking one teaspoonful in warm water every morning. I then weighed 217 pounds, was always bothered with pains in my back and lower part of abdomen and sides.

"Now I am glad to say I am a well woman, feel much stronger, years younger, and my weight is 170 pounds. I do not only feel better but I look better, so all my friends say."

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks costs but 85 cents at Hamilton & Ryan's and druggists the world over. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast.

Attention to diet will help—cut out pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—the Kruschen way is the safe way to lose fat. Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

WON'T RUN FOR MAYOR

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—James W. Hook, formerly of Ames, Iowa, was twice drafted by Connecticut interests, once to come here to manage a great manufacturing plant, and again to take charge of the state's unemployment situation. But Mr. Hook has decided he will not permit New Haven to draft him as candidate for mayor. Mr. Hook's success with the state job had attracted the public notice, but when he was asked to run for mayor, he said emphatically, "Wouldn't consider it for a moment."

CONGRESS TO FACE DEMANDS FOR BEER

(Copyright, 1931, By International News Service)

WASHINGTON, Sept 17—Pressure for the legalization of real beer is becoming so high-powered and persistent in Washington that it now seems fairly certain that the oncoming congress is going to be compelled to meet the issue and grapple with it seriously.

In the ten years since prohibition, beer bills almost without number have been introduced in congress only to be laughed down, piled down, or left to die a moldy death in some committee pigeon-hole.

That this will not be true in the approaching session is now generally conceded, even by the drys themselves. They are confident they can beat them, but they admit that the fight is going to be harder this session than ever before, and a few, a very few, are not cocksure of the ultimate outcome.

The difference between this session and past sessions is that the battle for beer has now been put upon a somewhat different plane—economic rather than prohibitory. "Beer for revenue" now dominates the discussion instead of "beer for the thirsty."

With a billion dollar deficit already incurred, and a billion and a half treasury shortage anticipated for the current year, the treasury is fairly desperate to find a "painless tax" which will take up some of the slack without resort to the dread method of increasing the income tax brackets.

Powerful bankers and industrialists, who heretofore have abstained from any participation in the Guerilla warfare over prohibition, are undeniably swinging over to the "beer for revenue" philosophy as a means of forestalling federal tax increases. Their pressure upon President Hoover and upon the administration generally is enormous and it is growing. The White House mail-bags are filled daily with this pressure and it is augmented by many of Mr. Hoover's callers, big business men, bankers, and political well-wishers.

The American federation of labor, which has long advocated beer for the workingman, is now advocating "beer for revenue" and as a means of forestalling the wage cuts which labor envisions if taxes upon industry are increased.

Next week at the American Legion convention in Detroit it would not be surprising to see the legion go on record for legalizing beer, for the first time in its history.

Collings Death Still Is Mystery

BY JAMES L. KILGALLAN.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Sept. 17. —Police officials worked at a hectic pace today in a determined attempt to solve Long Island Sound's most baffling murder mystery following the finding of the bruised and battered body of Benjamin P. Collings, Stamford, Conn., yachtsman.

The recovery of the body confused rather than clarified the slaying of Collings on his yacht a week ago. Collings' body, the hands and feet bound and the skull fractured from left cheekbone to the top of his head, was washed up on the beach of the estate of Marshall Field 3d at Lloyd's Neck, L. I., yesterday morning. During the early hours of Thursday, Sept. 10, he had been mysteriously cast overboard from his cabin cruiser, the Penguin.

Mrs. Lillian Collings, attractive 28-year old widow of the slain man, will be interrogated by the authorities again even though her relatives have retained counsel to "protect her rights." Officials of Suffolk-co, who now have assumed jurisdiction over the case, insist that further questioning of the woman is necessary to aid in clarification of certain details of the murder mystery.

A coroner's inquest was to be held today at Huntington town hall, where temporary investigation headquarters have been established.

Whether Mrs. Collings, whose strange story of the murder on the yacht and her subsequent kidnapping by two "pirates" first brought the attention of the authorities to the case, will appear at the inquest was problematical. She was reported to be in a state of near collapse at her home in Stamford, where she has been in seclusion for two days following four lengthy interrogations to which she was subjected by Nassau-co and Suffolk-co officials prior to the finding of the body.

District Attorney Alexander Blue, of Suffolk County, who has assumed complete charge of the investigation, indicated this morning that he was not entirely satisfied with the story told by Mrs. Collings. She said two men boarded her husband's yacht along about midnight a week ago last night and insisted that he take a "wounded companion" across the sound. However, she never saw the wounded man.

The "pirates," she said, later engaged in a quarrel with her husband, trussed him up, and tossed him overboard. Then they kidnapped her, forcing her to leave her five-year-old daughter, Barbara, behind. They paddled her about in a canoe for hours and finally put her off on the motorboat Bo-Peep, from which she was rescued at 5:30 in the morning. She declared one of the men was about fifty year old, the other a youth of 17. She said the elderly man attempted to attack her.

JUDGE VETOS A MARRIAGE

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. — Connecticut laws give each judge of probate the right to decide whether a girl under sixteen may get married. When such a case came up to Probate Judge William F. Mangan here, he declared the girl must wait another year. The girl wanted to marry a man 21. Judge Mangan declared he was averse to all hasty marriages.

STATE FAIR STILL BLUE RIBBON EVENT OF THE CENTRAL STATES

The Ohio State Fair is still the blue ribbon exposition of the American continent. Its buildings, parks, driveways, landscaping and scenic beauty excel all similar institutions. In every line of exhibit it ranks in quantity and quality above all others.

The Ohio State Fair, of 1931, portrayed the excellence of America's leading livestock breeds. The judges, who awarded the ribbons, were the highest calibre. In 1931, the number of animals exhibited and the number of entries registered, were the greatest in the history of the exposition.

The saddle, sulky, and draft horse, each won applause. Both beef and dairy herds played well for part. The lamb and bacon type of hog, each had its admirers.

Mary's little lamb is still a favorite. Last year, 1930, a great building was dedicated. It is perhaps the greatest show pavilion, in the world, for sheep and wool. At that time, the statement was made, in Governor Cooper's address, that this building would meet the demands of exhibitors for the next ten years. But this year, two large tents were needed, to take care of the overflow of the world's greatest sheep and wool display.

The poultry show had its thousands of visitors. Year by year, it better grows. Cock and hen are still in partnership with bacon and eggs and hen and eggs. All lines of poultry exhibits were at the peak of quality.

Never before was there such richness of color, flavor, quantity, and artistic arrangement, displayed in the agricultural and horticultural department. The tokens of a master hand were to be seen in the manner, in which these exhibits were placed on dress parade.

Failure of the legislature to provide funds kept some of Ohio's state institutions from making their usual exhibits. One of the high-sport features was the Columbus buildings. The Capital City Chamber of Commerce filled this building with pleasing exhibits.

The State Highway exhibit pleased State Fair visitors. Half of Ohio's tax dollars come from the four cent gas tax.

The exhibits made by the Conservation division were highly interesting. The Junior Fair was a big surprise. The grandstand program won applause.

No Overpopulation

FEARS that the world is shortly to be so overcrowded with people as to make feeding and housing them a constant problem are allayed somewhat by a comparison of recent statistics on world population with estimates of a century and two centuries ago. Such a comparison leaves the comforting impression that world-wide starvation is not an imminent threat to humanity.

There was little increase in population between the year 1700 and the year 1800. But during the next hundred years it increased as it had never increased before within the recorded history of man. Whereas the world in 1800 had an estimated population of 630,000,000, it was the home of 1,550,000,000 people in 1900. Compared with the growth during the nineteenth century, the growth of population during the first 30 years of the twentieth century has been very slow, rapid growth in some countries being counteracted by diminishing populations in others.

Young, sparsely settled countries welcome rapid growth in population because it means business and prosperity; old, densely populated countries fear it because it means starvation, disease and social and political unrest.

How much of America's present business depression is due to immigration restriction and a birth rate that is 5 percent lower than it was in 1870? Has the United States arrived at the stage in its development where it must choose between less prosperity and another burst of population increase with its attendant evils? Or can it maintain a stable population at home, while enriching itself upon the growth of other countries?

Prosperous Belgium

TO speak of the "world-wide depression" is not quite accurate. For example, Belgium is one country that is not singing laments about "the encircling gloom." She is fairly prosperous and has no doubts about the future.

There is no secret about her "success." After the war she re-modeled her industrial plant and adopted American mass production methods. This with low wages made a team that defied competition.

Either through rare foresight or fortunate circumstances Belgium is not choked with surpluses of the commodities of which there are world surpluses, but she is strong in goods that are marketable at profitable prices.

Her industrial leaders made another wise step during the bullish period. Instead of cutting dividends, melons as fast as they matured, they permitted them to accumulate into reserves which have proved business confidence and profited working capital.

The Belgian government is benefiting now from a lesson learned in 1926, when it went through a period of stringency. Reckless spending led to overuse of short-term credits, and there was an unbalanced budget. The present depression caught her fully prepared through a five-year-old policy of pay as you go. Declining revenues would not catch her burdened with debts and struggling with a budget exceeding the national revenue.

Nationally, commercially and individually the depression caught the United States, as it did most other countries, off its guard. Will it be prepared for the next one?

EARTH dwellers, laboring under the delusion that they and their interests are of vast importance in the scheme of the universe, will derive little satisfaction from the calculations of Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of Harvard observatory. These calculations should do much toward reducing inflation of the human ego and should serve to demonstrate that the most important of man's activities are to the universe, in a material point of view, somewhat as the penny to our $20,000,000,000 war debt.

The earth is not the center of the universe nor is it even an important part of the celestial system, physically considered. In fact we are 2,000 light years or approximately 300,000,000,000,000 miles as to crow flies, from

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE
by ANTHONY ABBOT
Copyright by CONVIC, FRIEDE, INC. — DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Geraldine Foster, a very attractive young reception clerk in the Washington Square office of Dr. Humphrey Maskell, vanished from her Morningside Heights apartment on the night before Christmas. Her room mate, Betty Canfield, reported her disappearance to the police three days after Christmas and appealed directly to Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt for aid. Betty held a phone conversation with Geraldine on Saturday afternoon and found her in the latter's apartment, during which the latter said she wished she was dead. Betty telephoned Geraldine's mother and learned she had not arrived for the holiday. The missing girl's fiancé, Harry Armstrong, had not seen her since Friday. Dr. Maskell says he returned to his office Saturday afternoon to find Geraldine gone. Colt goes at once to the Foster apartment.

CHAPTER IV

THE apartment was a pleasant and homelike place with its two bedrooms, living room, kitchenette and bath. I noticed the gay chintzes, the nice prints, the good-humored touches of novelty and color in odd and unexpected nooks and corners. Then I remembered that I was a stranger intruding here, where one had waked and slept and dreamed of her wedding day had gone out and had now mysteriously disappeared.

Returning to the living room, after roaming from front to back, Thatcher Colt sat down on the edge of the couch and, leaning on his walking stick, shook his head and stared around him with thoughtful eyes as if seeking the truth about Geraldine Foster through clairvoyance. Then he began to question Betty Canfield. Once more I admired the quiet and adroit method which he employed with such consummate skill; he was leading this girl to talk about her friend confidently, so that she was almost unaware that she was being interrogated by a master of inquiry, dreaded throughout the underworld. For half an hour they chatted on, and at the close Thatcher Colt said:

"I think I have what I want now, Betty—a psychological portrait of Geraldine Foster, reception clerk in a doctor's office, and why?—Because she wanted to be in the big city, instead of the little town where her parents lived. An ambitious girl who was taking night courses in Columbia University. A good-natured creature, you roomed with her for three years and never had a serious disagreement?"

"That's true," said Betty.

Loyal and Generous.

"Loyal to the man she intended to marry," resumed Thatcher Colt, checking off the points of characterization he had drawn forth by his questions. "Sends little presents home to the family every week, although her salary is small and her father is worth perhaps fifty thousand dollars. A girl who is kind to her mother, father, brother. Within three days of her marriage and poof! she disappears, after that curious conversation you had with her over the telephone."

"Oh, there must be some way of tracing her!" exclaimed Betty, who just started—and I want to go right on. Mind? Now, this afternoon you referred to your friend's employer, Doctor Humphrey Maskell. "They call him 'the laughing doctor' of Washington Square," said Betty, with a toss of her head. "Who calls him that?" "His patients and his friends," Geraldine told me. "Thatcher Colt was refilling his pipe."

"Do you think Doctor Maskell has any idea where Geraldine is?" he asked amiably. "She was quarrelling with him before I called up. And I wouldn't put anything past him. I think I told you his own family won't speak to him."

A Fine Family.

"Sometimes that is a compliment," said Thatcher Colt, "but not in this instance. There is not a better trial lawyer in New York City than George Maskell. The father is a retired architect, designed the Tablature Building and three or four others—made millions—why, Betty, it's a very fine family."

"All fine families have their dark mutton," declared Betty. "Often Geraldine has sat in that very chair, I occupy now and told me about Doctor Maskell and his family. His own brother, George, the lawyer, has not visited him in twenty long years. I think that the doctor did sometimes see his father, but not often. There was a very strange situation in that family, I think Geraldine alluded to."

"But you still haven't told me why the family doesn't like Doctor Maskell?" urged Thatcher Colt. "I don't know—but I do know that I have always found the personality of the man repelling and I wanted Geraldine to leave him long ago. I believe he could tell us about Geraldine this minute if he chose."

"But that's just a hunch?" "Of course it is the doctor who won't have anything to do with the rest of the family—the boot may be on the other foot," suggested Colt. "Anyway, there's nothing so far to confirm your hunch, Betty, or to connect Doctor Maskell with the matter in any way—actually?"

She admitted there was not, and he sat back thoughtfully. "Betty," he remarked, "I have the impolite feeling that you are not being entirely frank with me about Doctor Maskell."

"I am trying to tell you everything, all that I know is what Geraldine told me. She was very anxious about him. She always said he wasn't as wild as he liked to make out. But she found out last Spring that detectives were following the doctor and she always believed his family had employed them."

"George Maskell, you mean?" "Or Mrs. George, the gorgeous Portia, who made such a hit in the Welkes bad check case. Or even the doctor's father. They are all of them, in spite of their political liberalism, frightened to death that the doctor will do some-

Thatcher Colt smiled with a kind of mild amusement. "How much our employees know about our private affairs," he remarked.

Betty Canfield flushed with indignation. "Mr. Colt—" "Easy, easy," interrupted the Commissioner. "I mean no offense."

"But Geraldine talked to me about her employer because I don't like her working for the doctor—I distrusted him."

"Again—why?" "I told you. That feeling led us to talk a good deal about him. Geraldine would come home and tell me how he raved against his own family, because they shut him out—calling his sister-in-law a money-grabbing banshee, making fun of her drawing and singing, and calling his own father a decreed old man. Geraldine used to feel badly about it. And when Mrs. Maskell—the doctor's sister-in-law—went to Europe last Summer, I think the doctor tried to make it up with George. But it didn't work and the doctor cursed around the office so that again I tried to make Geraldine resign."

"And she wouldn't?" "No—she liked him as much as I disliked him." Colt nodded thoughtfully. "Betty," he said suddenly. "You mentioned that your room-mate sometimes stayed away on weekends and holidays."

Royal Blood.

"Did she always confide in you about her personal matters?" "She used to, but not lately; she often talked with me about the jealousy of Harry Armstrong, her fiancé, for instance, but for the last few months she has grown quite secretive. Ever since she began to talk about having royal blood in her veins."

Thatcher Colt leaned forward. "What made her say that, Betty?" "Some one had written to her about her family tree."

"I see. She stopped telling you her secrets then?" "I don't mean there was any connection. But she did keep her business to herself—most of the time."

"Perhaps you may save her life, you know, by telling everything you know—or suspect."

"I don't know anything. And besides—suppose she were to come back this minute and find me telling you—"

Grotesquely enough there came a ring at the door bell just then. Betty admitted into the living room a well-dressed elderly couple who seemed surprised to find us there. Old Edmund L. Foster, father of the missing girl, was a tall, bent man, with shrewd blue eyes and large, red, gnarled hands which dangled at his sides and gave him a helpless air. His wife was almost as tall as he, but quite stout; her round face was wrinkled and her eyes sparkled excitedly behind double-lensed glasses.

After the introduction Thatcher Colt explained to the old couple the steps that were being taken to look for their daughter.

Worry and Nervousness Linked With Ill-Health

Fear of Breakdown Is Common, and Authority Warns That Special Care of Physical Condition Should Be Taken When Mind Is Upset by Personal Problems

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

TO be afraid of a nervous breakdown is not at all uncommon. Many a person visits the doctor for help, admitting the only thing the matter is this particular fear.

It seems strange that one should go to a doctor, not to find what is wrong, but to tell him the nature of the ailment. In this matter, however, that is actually what happens.

Good health is a condition in which we live longest and in which we enjoy ourselves most. This desirable state can exist only when we give the body the necessary care and rest. But it is not enough to regard the physical aspects alone; it is equally as important to pay attention to the mental health. It is impossible to rest if the mind is disturbed, worried or otherwise upset.

Such a mental state is easily brought about by physical fatigue. It is true, too, that worry, undue excitement, nervous apprehension and fear are capable of producing definite damage to the body.

If you are working very hard make sure you are getting the necessary sleep, at least seven or eight hours daily. Your diet is also very important. Hard work creates the demand for food, both palatable and easily digested. The diet should contain an abundance of fresh vegetables, fruits, milk, cream and butter. Get out of doors, and, above all, get into the sun.

If you have not been working and are worried because of the present state of affairs, try to be philosophical about it. No matter what may be your financial state it is just as important as ever to maintain your bodily health.

Worry will not help to get a new job. A long siege of worry won't help to hold a hard job. Worrying lowers the vitality and will render you less able to undertake new duties as you should.

If you do not feel up to par, if you are easily irritated or apprehensive, if your mind is full of fear, consult with your physician. In all probability he will suggest rest and, if need be, prescribe the necessary tonics.

AT THE CLIFTONA
Actors play the parts of actors in "Dude Ranch," the Jack Oakie special comedy with the big name supporting cast which comes to the Cliftona Theatre on Friday.
The story of this hilarious comedy, based upon Milton Krim's humorous novel, "The Lone Rider of the Mojave," reveals the fun that ensues when a traveling troupe of stage performers take over the under-cover amusement concession at a ritzy guest ranch in the Rockies.
Oakie is seen at the star actor of the troupe. The others are Eugene Pallette, Mitzi Green and Cecil Weston. Arriving at the ranch owned by Stuart Erwin, they suggest that he will be making things interesting for his patrons if he allows them to dress up as characters of the old West and put on a few realistic scenes in the vicinity of the hotel.

AT THE GRAND
Acting in vaudeville and pictures—writing for vaudeville and pictures—and operating a motion picture theater—and he still feels that there is something he would like to do in the field of dramatic endeavor. This man who is so vitally interested in the amusement world is Hugh Cummings, who plays the comedy role in Columbia's "Arizona," the film adaptation of Augustus Thomas' famous stage play, showing Thursday and Friday at the Grand Theatre.
Cummings has been seen in a number of motion pictures in comedy roles in recent years, but he prefers direction to acting and hopes some day to wield the megaphone... and he prays it will be real soon.

Others in the cast of "Arizona" are Laura La Plante, John Wayne and June Clyde. George B. Seitz directed.
TO CHECK ELK HUNTERS
CHEYENNE, Wyo.—Wyoming is going to keep a close check on elk killed in the Jackson Hole country this fall. Checking camps are to be established at entry points and as the hunters enter the region their names will be taken and, when they return, elk coupons will be removed from their hunting licenses to prevent their entering the region and killing elk a second time. Stockmen believe that the checking system will prevent unscrupulous hunters from killing cattle, as well as keep a check on the elk.

No Overpopulation

FEARS that the world is shortly to be so overcrowded with people as to make feeding and housing them a constant problem are allayed somewhat by a comparison of recent statistics on world population with estimates of a century and two centuries ago. Such a comparison leaves the comforting impression that world-wide starvation is not an imminent threat to humanity.

There was little increase in population between the year 1700 and the year 1800. But during the next hundred years it increased as it had never increased before within the recorded history of man. Whereas the world in 1800 had an estimated population of 630,000,000, it was the home of 1,550,000,000 people in 1900. Compared with the growth during the nineteenth century, the growth of population during the first 30 years of the twentieth century has been very slow, rapid growth in some countries being counteracted by diminishing populations in others.

Young, sparsely settled countries welcome rapid growth in population because it means business and prosperity; old, densely populated countries fear it because it means starvation, disease and social and political unrest.

How much of America's present business depression is due to immigration restriction and a birth rate that is 5 percent lower than it was in 1870? Has the United States arrived at the stage in its development where it must choose between less prosperity and another burst of population increase with its attendant evils? Or can it maintain a stable population at home while enriching itself upon the growth of other countries?

Prosperous Belgium

To speak of the "world-wide depression" is not quite accurate. For example, Belgium is one country that is not singing jerebads about the "encroaching gloom." She is fairly prosperous and has no doubts about the future.

There is no secret about her "success." After the war she re-modeled her industrial plant and adopted American mass production methods. This with low wages made a team that defies competition.

Either through rare foresight or fortunate circumstances Belgium is not choked with surpluses of the commodities of which there are world surpluses, but she is strong in goods that are marketable at profitable prices.

Her industrial leaders made another wise step during the bullish period. Instead of cutting dividend, melons as fast as they matured, they permitted them to accumulate into reserves which have preserved business confidence and profited working capital.

The Belgian government is benefiting now from a lesson learned in 1926, when it went through a period of stringency. Reckless spending led to overuse of short-term credits, and there was an unbalanced budget. The present depression caught her fully prepared through a five-year-old policy of pay as you go. Declining revenues would not catch her burdened with debts and struggling with a budget exceeding the national revenue.

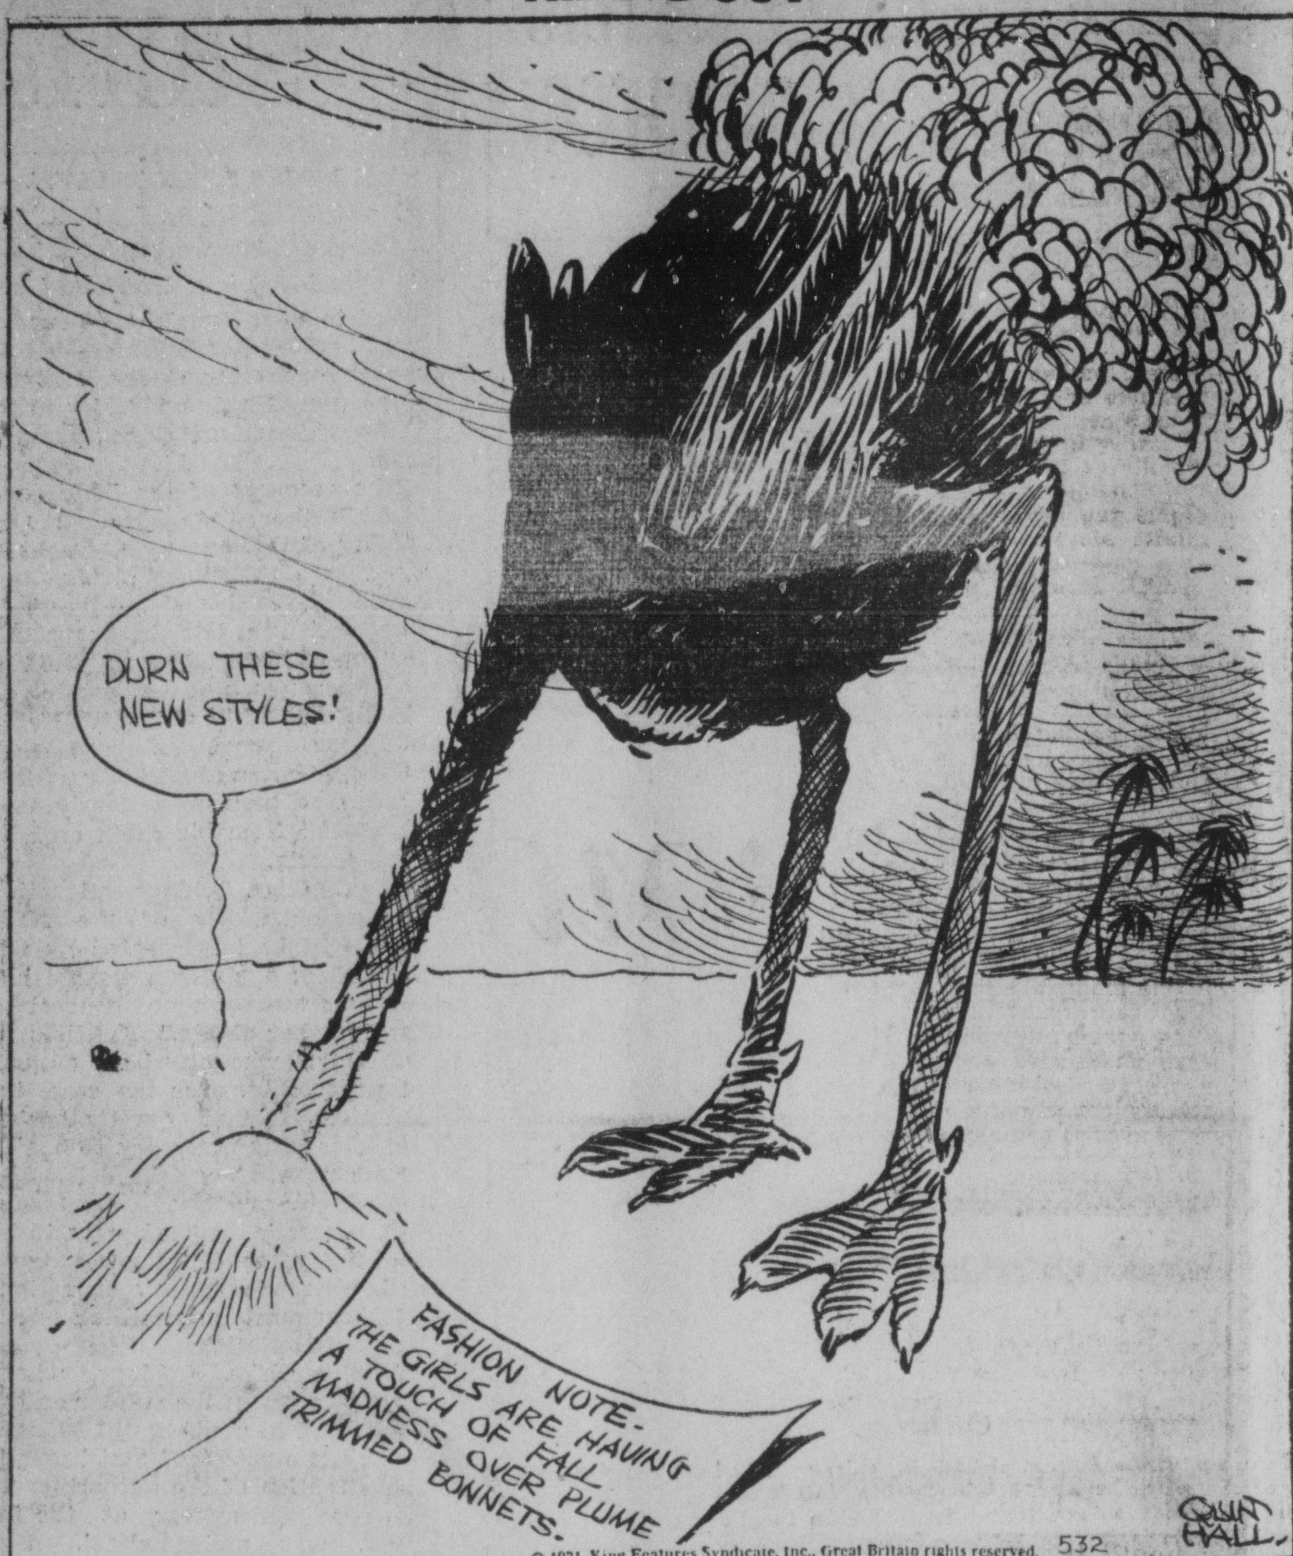

Nationally, commercially and individually the depression caught the United States, as it did most other countries, off its guard. Will it be prepared for the next one?

Insignificant

EARTH dwellers, laboring under the delusion that they and their interests are of vast importance in the scheme of the universe, will derive little satisfaction from the calculations of Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of Harvard observatory. These calculations should do much toward reducing inflation of the human ego and should serve to demonstrate that the most important of man's activities are to the universe, in a material point of view, somewhat as the penny to our $20,000,000,000 war debt.

The earth is not the center of the universe, nor is it even an important part of the celestial system, physically considered. In fact, we are 2,000 light years or approximately 300,000,000,000,000 miles as to crow flies, from

HIDING OUT

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE

by ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT BY CONVIC, FRIEDE, INC., — DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Geraldine Foster, a very attractive young reception clerk in the Washington Square office of Dr. Humphrey Maskell, vanished from her Morningside Heights apartment on the night before Christmas. Her room mate, Betty Canfield, reported her disappearance to the police three days after Christmas and appealed directly to Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt for aid. Betty held a phone conversation with Geraldine on Saturday, Christmas Eve, during which the latter said she wished she was dead. Betty telephoned Geraldine's mother and learned she had not arrived for the holiday. The missing girl's fiancé, Harry Armstrong, had not seen her since Friday. Dr. Maskell says he returned to his office Saturday afternoon to find Geraldine gone. Colt goes at once to the Foster apartment.

CHAPTER IV.

THE apartment was a pleasant and homelike place with its two bedrooms, living room, kitchenette and bath. I noticed the gay chintzes, the nice prints, the good-humored touches of novelty and color in odd and unexpected nooks and corners. Then I remembered that I was a stranger intruding here, where one had waked and slept and dreamed of her wedding day and gone out and had now mysteriously disappeared.

Returning to the living room, after roaming from front to back, Thatcher Colt sat down on the edge of the couch and, leaning on his walking stick, shook his head and stared around him with thoughtful eyes as if seeking the truth about Geraldine Foster through clairvoyance. Then he began to question Betty Canfield. Once more I admired the quiet and adroit method which he employed with such consummate skill; he was leading this girl to talk about her friend confidently, so that she was almost unaware that she was being interrogated by a master of inquisition, dreaded throughout the underworld. For half an hour they chatted on, and at the close Thatcher Colt said:

"I think I have what I want now, Betty—a psychological portrait of Geraldine Foster. A reception clerk in a doctor's office, and why?—Because she wanted to be in the big city, instead of the little town where her parents lived. An ambitious girl who was taking night courses in Columbia University. A good-natured creature—you roomed with her for three years and never had a serious disagreement?"

"That's true," said Betty.

Loyal and Generous.

"Loyal to the man she intended to marry," resumed Thatcher Colt, checking off the points of characterization he had drawn forth by his questions. "Sends little presents home to the family every week, although her salary is small and her father is worth perhaps fifty thousand dollars. A girl who is kind to her mother, father, brother. Within three days of her marriage and poof! she disappears, leaving that curious conversation you had with her over the telephone."

"Oh, there must be some way of tracing her!" exclaimed Betty, with a quiver of her lovely eyes.

"Easy does it, Betty. I've only just started—and I want to go right on. Mind? Now, this afternoon you referred to your friend's employer, Doctor Humphrey Maskell."

"They call him 'the laughing doctor' of Washington Square," said Betty, with a toss of her head.

"Who calls him that?"

"His patients and his friends," Geraldine told me.

Thatcher Colt was refilling his pipe. "Do you think Doctor Maskell has any idea where Geraldine is?" he asked amiably.

"She was quarrelling with him before I called up. And I wouldn't put anything past him. I think I told you his own family won't speak to him."

A Fine Family.

"Sometimes that is a compliment," said Thatcher Colt, "but not in this instance. There is not a better trial lawyer in New York City than George Maskell. The father is a retired architect, designed the Tablature Building and three or four others—made millions—why, Betty, it's a very fine family."

"All fine families have their dark mutton," declared Betty. "Often Geraldine has sat in that very chair you occupy now and told me about Doctor Maskell and his family. His own brother, George, the lawyer, has not visited him in twenty long years. I think that the doctor did sometimes see his father, but not often. There was a very strange situation in that family. I think Geraldine always had the suspicion that the doctor was a little mad. He was given to unexpected and unexpected absences and he had a mad passion for chopping down trees—he laughs about it and says he is imitating the exiled Kaiser in Doorn and that he loves the swing of the axe."

"But you still haven't told me why the family doesn't like Doctor Maskell?" urged Thatcher Colt. "I don't know—but I do know that I have always found the personality of the man repelling and I wanted Geraldine to leave him long ago. I believe he could tell us about Geraldine this minute if he chose."

"But that's just a hunch?"

"Of course. This is the doctor who won't have anything to do with the rest of the family—the boot may be on the other foot," suggested Colt. "Anyway, there's nothing so far to confirm your hunch, Betty, or to connect Doctor Maskell with the matter in any way—actually?"

She admitted there was not, and he sat back thoughtfully.

"Betty," he remarked, "I have the impolite feeling that you are not being entirely frank with me about Doctor Maskell."

"I am trying to tell you everything. All that I know is what Geraldine told me. She was very anxious about him. She always said he wasn't as wild as he liked to make out. But she found out last Spring that detectives were following the doctor and she always believed his family had employed them."

"George Maskell, you mean?"

"Or Mrs. George, the gorgeous Portia, who made such a hit in the Welkes bad check case. Or even the doctor's father. They are all of them, in spite of their political liberalism, frightened to death that the doctor will do some-

Thatcher Colt smiled with a kind of mild amusement.

"How much our employes know about our private affairs," he remarked.

Betty Canfield flushed with indignation. "Mr. Colt—"

"Easy, easy," interrupted the Commissioner, "I meant no offense."

"But Geraldine talked to me about her employer because I did not like her working for the doctor—I distrusted him."

"Again—why?"

"Instinctively, as I told you. That feeling led us to talk a good deal about him. Geraldine would come home and tell me how he raved against his own family, because they shut him out—calling his sister-in-law a money-grabbing banshee, making fun of her drawing and singing, and calling his own father a deceived old man. Geraldine used to feel badly about it. And when Mrs. Maskell—the doctor's sister-in-law—went to Europe last Summer, I think the doctor tried to make it up with George. But it didn't work and the doctor cursed around the office so that again I tried to make Geraldine resign."

"No—she liked him as much as I disliked him."

Colt nodded thoughtfully. "Betty," he said suddenly, "You mentioned that your room-mate sometimes stayed away on week-ends and holidays."

Royal Blood.

"Did she always confide in you about her personal matters?"

"She used to, but not lately; she often talked with me about the jealousy of Harry Armstrong, her fiancé, for instance, but for the last few months she has grown quite secretive. Ever since she began to talk about having royal blood in her veins."

Thatcher Colt leaned forward.

"What made her say that, Betty?"

"Some one had written to her about her family tree."

"I see. She stopped telling you her secrets then?"

"I don't mean there was any connection. But she did keep her business to herself—most of the time."

"Perhaps you may save her life, you know, by telling everything you know—or suspect."

"I don't know anything. And besides—suppose she were to come back this minute and find me telling you—"

Grotesquely enough there came a ring at the door bell just then. Betty admitted into the living room a well-dressed elderly couple who seemed surprised to find us there. Old Edmund L. Foster, father of the missing girl, was a tall, bent man, with shrewd blue eyes and large, red, gnarled hands which dangled at his sides and gave him a helpless air. His wife was almost as tall as he, but quite stout; her round face was wrinkled and her eyes sparkled excitedly behind double-lensed glasses.

After the introduction Thatcher Colt explained to the old couple the steps that were being taken to look for their daughter.

Worry and Nervousness Linked With Ill-Health

Fear of Breakdown Is Common, and Authority Warns That Special Care of Physical Condition Should Be Taken When Mind Is Upset by Personal Problems

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

TO be afraid of a nervous breakdown is not at all uncommon. Many a person visits the doctor for help, admitting the only thing the matter is this particular fear.

It seems strange that one should go to a doctor, not to find what is wrong, but to tell him the nature of the ailment. In this matter, however, that is actually what happens.

Good health is a condition in which we live longest and in which we enjoy ourselves most. This desirable state can exist only when we give the body the necessary care and rest. But, it is not enough to regard the physical aspects alone; it is equally as important to pay attention to the mental health.

It is impossible to rest if the mind is disturbed, worried or otherwise upset. Such a mental state is easily brought about by physical fatigue. It is true, too, that worry, undue excitement, nervous apprehension and fear are capable of producing definite damage to the body.

If you are working very hard make sure you are getting the necessary sleep, at least seven or eight hours daily. Your diet is also very important. Hard work creates the demand for food, both palatable and easily digested. The diet should contain an abundance of fresh vegetables, fruits, milk, cream and butter. Get out of doors, and, above all, get into the sun.

If you have not been working and are worried, because of the present state of affairs, try to be philosophical about it. No matter what may be your financial state, it is just as important as ever to maintain your bodily health.

Worry will not help to get a new job. A long siege of worry won't help to hold a new job. Worrying lowers the vitality and will render you less able to undertake new duties as you should.

If you do not feel up to par, if you are easily irritated or apprehensive, if your mind is full of fear, consult with your physician. In all probability he will suggest rest and, if need be, prescribe the necessary tonic.

At the Circleville Theatres

AT THE CLIFTONA

Actors play the parts of actors in "Dude Ranch," the Jack Oakie special comedy with the big name supporting cast which comes to the Cliftona Theatre on Friday.

The story of this hilarious comedy, based upon Milton Kirm's humorous novel, "The Lone Rider of the Mojave," reveals the fun that ensues when a traveling troupe of stage performers take over the under-cover amusement concession at a ritzy guest ranch in the Rockies.

Oakie is seen at the star actor of the troupe. The others are Eugene Palette, Milti Green and Cecil Weston. Arriving at the ranch owned by Stuart Erwin, they suggest that he will be making things interesting for his patrons if he allows them to dress up as characters of the old West and put on a few realistic scenes in the vicinity of the hotel.

AT THE GRAND

Acting in vaudeville and pictures—writing for vaudeville and pictures—and operating a motion picture theater—and he still feels that there is something he would like to do in the field of dramatic endeavor. This man who is so vitally interested in the amusement world is Hugh Cummings, who plays the comedy role in Columbia's "Arizona," the film adaptation of Augustus Thomas' famous stage play, showing Thursday and Friday at the Grand Theatre.

Cummings has been seen in a number of motion pictures in comedy roles in recent years, but he prefers direction to acting and hopes some day to wield the megaphone . . . and he prays it will be real soon.

Others in the cast of "Arizona" are Laura La Plante, John Wayne and June Clyde. George B. Seitz directed.

TO CHECK ELK HUNTERS

CHEYENNE, Wyo.—Wyoming is going to keep a close check on elk killed in the Jackson Hole country this fall. Checking camps are to be established at entry points and as the hunters enter the region their names will be taken and, when they return with elk, coupons will be removed from their hunting licenses to prevent their entering the region and killing elk a second time. Stockmen believe that the checking system will prevent unscrupulous hunters from killing cattle, as well as keep a check on the elk.

LETTER REVEALS GANGLAND MOVES

CHICAGO, Sept. 16—"Mike De Pike" Heitler, murdered vice monger, knew who his killers might be and named them before he died.

Heitler, or a body believed to be his, was found on April 28 burned beyond recognition in an automobile near an abandoned icehouse near Barrington, Ill., 21 miles from Chicago.

Heitler named his possible gangster-slayers in a letter now in the hands of Chief Investigator Pat Roche of the state's attorney office, according to a story published in the Chicago American today.

The crudely written letter revealed the sordid tale of the methods of gangland.

It told how territories are divided between rival gangs.

It links Alfred "Jack" Lingle, slain Tribune reporter, with the underworld.

It reveals how the income of gangs is split up between its members.

In brief it lays bare all the crafty devices of syndicated vice.

In the last paragraph of his illiterate missive "Mike De Pike" named the persons who should be questioned in the event of his death.

Second in the list was Alphonse Capone, internationally notorious as the super gangster of the universe.

First was William Skidmore, professional bondsman, politician, former saloon keeper, accused briber and fixer.

Other possible killers were: Jack Gusik, right hand man to Capone and business head of his organization.

Jack Bruno, confidential agent for the syndicate.

Rocky, a minor collector for the Zuta side of the Jack Zuta-Al Capone syndicate.

James Bolcastro, king of the bombers, all around racketeer.

Lawrence Mangano, west side gambler.

James Adduci, political lightweight, racketeer, and fixer.

Here and there through the letter other names appear, producing an imposing roster of Chicago's gangland.

Then there is Jake Lindull, easily identified from the text as Lingle, the slain reporter. In the paragraph following first mention of "Lindull" direct mention is made of Lingle, but the name is misspelled.

Other names include: two police captains, a former deputy commissioner, and a prohibition commissioner high in federal service. The American deleted their names for the protection of the inquiry centering around them.

The letter goes back to August, 1929, in its revelation of the organization of the notorious syndicate. It states that the first call came from Jack Zuta and reveals the deal by which the territory was divided for the benefit of the Capone and the Aiello-Zuta interests.

How the income of the syndicate was split is openly stated. Capone got 25 per cent, Zuta 25 per cent, Mangano and Adduci, 15 per cent between them, Rocky, 10 per cent, and Heitler, Bolcastro and Bruno, 25 per cent to be split three ways.

Labor is discovered to be the grand conqueror building up nations more surely than the proudest battles.

FOR GOVERNORS' MEETING

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Portland, Ore., was suggested by Gov. George H. Dern of Utah recently as the meeting place for the governors of western states in a circular letter mailed to the other governors. He asked that the conference be held on Oct. 27, which has been designated Governor's day at the Pacific International Livestock Exposition. Gov. Dern is the only remaining member of the executive committee appointed at the conference here last year. Other members were former Gov. H. C. Baldrige of Idaho and the late Gov. Frank C. Emerson of Wyoming. Public lands, silver, national forest problems and the copper tariff will be among the subjects discussed.

CYCLING AT BOOM STAGE

BIRMINGHAM, Eng.—Perhaps it's just a part of the general return to feathered howlers, battles, revivals of "Florodora," and other things Victorian, but the strong sport in the popularity of the bicycle in England this summer is more soundly explained in the fact that most persons just can't afford motorcycles and automobiles.

Then, too, the constantly growing "open air" movement has had something to do with it. One manufacturing concern has been turning out a thousand machines a day—twice its production a year ago. While the Cyclists' Touring Club had a membership of only a few thousand after the war, it now has 28,000 on its rolls, and has district associations all over the country, officials said. Women form a large part of the membership.

In the old days, chivalry consisted in saying: "May I smoke?" Now it consists in saying: "Try one of mine."

THREE OUT OF FOUR STUDENTS EARN WAYS THROUGH COLLEGE

That a very large proportion of students in the United States earn their way through college is indicated by recent studies of material collected for a survey of 52 land-grant colleges and universities.

The Federal Office of Education reports that a careful check of returns from 34,589 alumni and former students show that 24,952 or 72 per cent were self-supporting wholly or in part while they attended college, and that 9,637 or 28 per cent depended upon their parents to defray the cost of their higher education.

America's land-grant colleges were established to provide educational opportunities for many who might be deterred from college by high tuition and especially for the energetic and ambitious of this class. They became pioneers in Engineering, Agriculture and Home Making Education. Results of the Office of Education's survey disclosing the unusually large numbers of self-supporting students indicate that the land-grant colleges are accomplishing this object.

The study showed that by far a greater proportion of the students pursuing courses in agriculture were self-supporting than in any other field of study, the percentage being 86. Next on the list were students in engineering and students preparing to take over the family business. The proportion of students in arts and sciences was 60 per cent.

In the case of women students studying home economics, half of them were wholly or partially self-supporting. The opportunities for women to earn their way in college were much less for men students, the survey revealed.

First Grid Contest Is Tomorrow Afternoon

Walnut-twp's Light But Fast Outfit To Furnish Opposition; Game to Start At 3 P. M.; Lineup is Yet Uncertain

With a brisk scrimmage behind them in an effort to perfect a number of plays, Coach Pete Herberholz' Tigers are ready for the invasion of the Walnut-twp grid-ders tomorrow afternoon. Game time is 3 p. m. and with the price of admission reduced it is a safe bet that a good crowd will be on hand.

Football weather doesn't prevail, that's true, but the Tiger squad has been working hard all this week with a large part of the squad going through their paces last week. Though the Tiger squad is not in midseason form by any means, it is expected to give a good account of itself against Coach Griffith's invaders.

According to the lineup Coach Herberholz announced Thursday several positions are not yet certain.

It's certain that Bill Hegele will be at center. Paul Wallace will be at one guard post and probably Pete Stout at the other. Stout is

DAYTON TEAM FACES TOUGH COLLEGE SKED

Squad at Work Under Coach Baujan; Boston College Scheduled on Oct. 3.

DAYTON, O., Sept. 17.—Head Coach Harry C. Baujan issued his first call for fifty-odd University of Dayton gridiron hopefuls on Tuesday, Sept. 15, just ten days before the opening game of the season against Hanover, Ind., College in the stadium Friday night, Sept. 25th.

It will not be the initial engagement with Hanover that will be worrying the Flyers as much as the second game of the season with Boston college at Boston on October 3. The easterners have defeated the flyers the past two years, in 1929, at Dayton by the score of 23 to 7 and last year at Boston to the tune of 15-7. But the local eleven will be composed of veteran material backed up by promising reserves and they stand a good chance of taking Boston.

The third game of the season will be October 9 when an ancient foe, Wilmington college, will be met at Dayton. Two more Friday night games follow in succession, one with West Virginia Wesleyan on October 16 and the following week with Butler on October 23rd. Neither one of these stack up as easy spots on the Flyers chart.

Transylvania college from Kentucky, the annual "warming up" opponent before the big tilt with Xavier university, will come to the stadium on Saturday afternoon Oct. 31. The Kentucky outfit pulled the biggest upset of the season last year in holding the Flyers to a tie.

The last three games on the Dayton schedule follow the same order as the 1930 schedule. On Nov. 7, the Flyers travel to Cincinnati to meet the Xavier Musketeers. Nov. 14 the annual homecoming day tilt will be played with John Carroll university at Dayton.

The season will be brought to a close with the annual tussel with Wittenberg's Lutherans. The game has been moved up this year from Thanksgiving Day to Nov. 21, the Saturday before Turkey Day.

Head Coach Baujan will have on the coaching staff William C. "Bill" Belanich on the line and Jack Keefer, former Brown university and Michigan star, in the backfield.

While the schedule for this year is one of the toughest the Flyers have faced, Baujan was nevertheless optimistic over the probable outcome of the season this year. "We'll be ready, so let em come," Baujan says.

also available for backfield work as his passing fin is very useful. In that case, Paul Rooney will probably go to the guard post.

At the tackles Med Good is sure of one spot. Dutch Hoffman is favored for the other but may be called into the backfield at any time. If Hoffman goes to the backfield he will be replaced by Bill Robinson, who also stands a chance of ousting Good from his berth unless this lad shows his ability.

Three candidates are putting up a battle for the wing positions and Coach Herberholz is not certain who is going to start. Carl Purcell and Bob Griffith were expected to take these positions without much trouble but Ned Thacher, Jackson-twp youth, built for an ideal flankman and lacking only experience, is putting up a fight for the job. Coach Herberholz, Thursday, was not certain just what pair would be given the starting beckon.

Then comes the backfield. Bob Hundley is sure to start at fullback and is expected to do the biggest part of the passing and kicking. If this athlete does the things he is capable of doing he will hold the fullback post all year. If he doesn't—well, that's another thing.

WHITE CALLS PLAY

Dean White will lineup at a halfback position and will call the plays for his team. Freddie Smith will play the quarterback berth. The other halfback post is the object of a scrap. George Iles, one of last year's best ground-gainers, reported for work Wednesday evening and if he is in shape will take over the other backfield post. Merle Davis is also available for this job and if he shows some fight and willingness to work may take the post from the other candidates. He can kick and pass and do just about everything a back should do, but lacks the scrap to go places. Pete Stout can be pulled from the line for ball-toting work and so can Hoffman.

The team as yet has no captain but it is possible one will be elected before the game tomorrow afternoon.

The game will begin at 3 p. m. with Burghalter of Heidelberg and Sears of Wooster officiating.

World's Finest Trained Horses and Riders to Contest at 1932 Olympics

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Equestrian events in which many of the world's finest trained riders and horses will be entered, will be a feature of the Olympic games to be conducted here from July 30 to Aug. 14, 1932.

Expert horsemen of America will compete with trained riders of more than a dozen foreign nations, including Europe, South America and the Orient.

The competitions will consist of three separate events which will test the endurance, courage and skillfulness of rider and horse.

The first competitions, to determine the ability of the best charger or hunter, will be known as the Concours Complet D'Equitation or three-day event, with a different phase conducted each day.

On the first day training tests will be made during which the horse will be ridden at a collected walk, trot and canter, extended walk, trot and gallop. Horse and rider also will be shown in backing, changing direction and two track work.

On the second day a twenty two mile endurance run will be

Mack's Mound Stars Gain Important Point in Schedule of Series Dates

By LES CONKLIN

NEW YORK—While the Cardinals will enjoy a psychological advantage this year in that the world series starts in St. Louis instead of Philadelphia, the Athletics will again have a tremendous advantage due to the interleague schedule.

Grove and Earnshaw, the outstanding hurlers of the American Leaguers, undoubtedly will be used in the first two games, on Oct. 1 and 2. The third game will not be played until Oct. 5 at Shibe Park, and the fourth game is scheduled for the following day. This will allow both of Mack's mound stars to rest three full days before making their second appearance in the series.

Grove and Earnshaw have flashed splendid form during the last few weeks, Lefty turning in a three-hit performance and Big George hurling a one-hit classic in one series. If these two stalwarts are "hot", the A's have a good chance to sweep the first four games of the series without depending on any other hurler.

If Grove or Earnshaw is not in shape for the fifth game, Connie Mack can gamble with Walberg

CRASHED; CLAIMS RECORD

SANTA MONICA, Calif.—Although Richard Devine, glider pilot, smashed his rocket glider on the jagged rocks at the base of the bluff along the coast here, he claimed a new glider record.

Devine took off from the Palos Verdes Hills and set off his torches until they all had been fired. The last rockets sent his light craft soaring over the bluff eight miles from the takeoff. A down current sucked the glider to the rocks about 100 feet below. The flimsy craft was demolished. Devine was knocked unconscious. Japanese fishermen rescued him from the wreckage.

BRITISH FLEET NOW PACIFIED

LONDON, September 17—The ships of the Atlantic fleet of the British navy, whose crews staged a Gandhi-like "passive resistance" strike against pay cuts, have now returned to their home ports from Invergordon, Scotland, it was announced by the admiralty this afternoon.

The ships had been held for several days at Invergordon following the sailors' refusal to take them to the North Sea for scheduled maneuvers.

LONDON, Sept. 17—Having accomplished more than 11,000 miles of European travel in less than six weeks, Mayor James J. Walker was on his way home today aboard the liner Bremen.

Mayor Walker left New York on August 4. He traveled through seven countries "looking for a rest but getting a vacation and an educational journey instead."

FOR HIGHER INCOME TAX

MEXICO CITY.—The Mexican government has under consideration a proposal urging abolishment of internal revenue taxes in favor of a higher income tax. The National Chamber of Commerce has repeatedly petitioned the government to carry out the plan, arguing that suppression of the internal revenue stamp system not only would prove a boost to national industries, but that it would effect a large saving in administrative expenditures.

BRITISH FLEET NOW PACIFIED

LONDON, September 17.—The ships of the Atlantic fleet of the British navy, whose crews staged a Gandhi-like "passive resistance" strike against pay cuts, have now returned to their home ports from Invergordon, Scotland, it was announced by the admiralty this afternoon.

The ships had been held for several days at Invergordon following the sailors' refusal to take them to the North sea for scheduled maneuvers.

WALKER ON OCEAN

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Having accomplished more than 11,000 miles of European travel in less than six weeks, Mayor James J. Walker was on his way home today aboard the liner Bremen.

The mayor and his party left British waters after being fogbound for more than six hours aboard the Tender Greetings, which took them from the pier and was forced to anchor off the Isle of Wight because of an impenetrable fog.

TO AID FARMERS
PIERRE, S. D.—Relief for the drought and grasshopper stricken farmers of South Dakota is provided for in a plan of highway work outlined by Gov. Warren Green. He intends to substitute man power for machinery as far as possible and to award the work only to permanent residents who have actually suffered from distressing conditions prevalent in the state because of the raids of grasshoppers or the crop losses occasioned by drought.

Odds and Ends

If only one of the predictors would say that we can look for a great economic debacle in 30 days there would be hope.

If the world doesn't come to an end in 1935, Voliva can probably think of another date.
